Rationale for change

Increase Exposure to Interest Rate Duration

Zenith has intentionally structured your portfolio to have lower duration (less sensitivity to changes in interest rates) than the benchmark. This positioning has been beneficial over what has been the most challenging 12-month period for bonds on record as interest rates have dramatically increased from historic lows.

The significant decline in bond prices and corresponding higher yields provides a far more attractive return outlook for Australian and global bonds. Furthermore, bonds offer renewed defensive qualities and stronger diversification capabilities. Should we enter a recessionary environment where the expectation would be that central banks lower interest rates, this would lead to capital appreciation of bonds.

We have therefore reallocated the weightings of your fixed interest managers to increase exposure to high-quality government bonds, while still retaining exposure to a diverse range of fixed interest sectors with different return profiles.

The changes will be effective as of 1 January 2023.
